COOKIES’ NATURE AND RELEVANT GROUNDS FOR USAGE

A "cookie" is a small text string created on the user’s computer by certain websites when the user accesses a website, with the purposes to store and transport information. Cookies are first sent from a web server (e.g. the computer running the visited website) to the user’s browser (e.g. Internet Explorer, Mozilla Firefox, Google Chrome, etc.), and then stored on the user’s computer before being sent back to the same website at the time of the next visit by the same user.

Certain actions could not be performed without cookies, which, in some cases, are therefore technically required. In some other cases, the website runs cookies either to facilitate the users’ browsing or to allow the latter to use specifically requested services.

Cookies may be stored in the system for long periods and may also include a unique identification code, which allows any websites running said cookies to track the user’s browsing within the same website for statistical or advertising purposes, that is to create a user’s personalized profile starting from the webpages visited by the latter so as to then show and/or send him targeted advertisements (so-called Behavioral Advertising).
